

Urban Journeys in Community Landownership

Overview of Project

Community Land Scotland are looking for artists to work closely with Urban Community Landowners: Govanhill Baths, Bridgend Farmhouse and Greener Kirkcaldy for a new project Urban Journeys. This call-out is for three separate commission opportunities (please see individual briefs in links) to work collaboratively with these Urban Community Landowners and creatively, visually or otherwise, tell their individual journeys of "ownership" and its relevance and impact for each trusts work and place.

Urban Journeys aims to dig down into these individual stories of ownership both for the Urban Landowners themselves, their communities and for others who are inspired to learn more about the impact community ownership can have for our local places. Artists will work closely within their commission to creatively tell, and find active ways to share, these stories to inspire and be a resource for other groups and communities in exploring the possibilities of ownership for themselves.

Community Land Scotland

Community Land Scotland is the representative body for Scotland's aspiring and post-purchase community landowners. They promote the sustainable development benefits of community landownership and work with communities to support and encourage community ownership of land and buildings throughout Scotland.

Our VISION is of more communities reaping the benefits of community landownership and promoting a socially just Scotland through community landownership. Together their members are own some 560,000 acres of land, home to some 25,000 people.

Bridgend Farmhouse Commission – cross-discipline

Govanhill Baths Commission – film and moving image

Greener Kirkcaldy Commission – mural and visual representation

Criteria and Working